Online Education

This pandemic has made all the educational Institutions across the world to adopt teaching online. Some countries have already adapted to online teaching where courses are conducted online, examinations are conducted online, and assignments are submitted through email. For countries like India, this is a good opportunity to strengthen the internet connectivity across rural India. Every village and towns in India should be digitally connected for better interaction between the students and teachers.

Online teaching is the need of the hour but it comes with a lot of challenges e. g infrastructure to connect with students is essential at the same time understanding student's adaptability to this sudden change also needs to be considered. Some will be quick to adapt to this system but some will take longer time to acquaint with this system. India should develop a good infrastructure to make this mission successful. The greatest advantage of such a system is education can become international.

The strength lies in the faculty and the institute. The challenge lies not only for students but also faculty as they need to change their mundane teaching methods and adapt to evolving technology-centered teaching and gain skills in online teaching. In a way, the learning institutes become virtual institutes and every student's home becomes his institute.

Higher education should be for flexible (curriculum) and should come –up with innovative ideas. Innovative models should be introduced. Of course there will be challenges that one will have to face at initial stages. Challenges lies in terms of technology, internet connectivity, infrastructure. Online education does not mean without laboratory experience to students. Skill development needs laboratories/workshops. There could be centers across the countries to support skill development activities.

Post Covid-19 is an opportunity to transform the higher education system. Institutes/ universities should utilize this opportunity to transform itself. Curriculum design, collaborations, skill development and faculty involvement —all should focus on internationalizing higher education
